Christine Chadwick

Christine is a freelance heritage consultant working with museums, galleries, heritage sites, arts and science centres, to develop successful learning and public programmes and to generate funding to support them.

Chris began her career teaching secondary history then moved into museum education, gaining experience as a senior manager with the National Trust at Quarry Bank Mill, and then at the Museum of Science and Industry in Manchester.

At MLA North West she led the Learning and Access Team supporting regional museums libraries and archives to strengthen their learning and public programmes and to widen participation to learning, helping to roll out the Inspiring Learning toolkit.

During her career she has gained valuable insight into good practice in learning and interpretation as well as community engagement, evaluation and volunteer management.
