

SANDFORD AWARD

Hannah Keddie

Hannah is currently a Learning Manager at English Heritage. She has worked in museums and heritage learning since 2017 and has a BA in History and an MA in Museum Studies. Hannah's previous learning officer roles at The Scottish Fisheries Museum and the Kent Mining Museum involved developing and delivering learning activities for varied audiences - from school workshops to family events and adult programming.

Hannah is passionate about making heritage engaging and accessible for all. In her current role, she is focused on providing historically accurate, authentic experiences that allow students to step into history in meaningful, fun and memorable ways. During her time at English Heritage, she has created site-specific learning resources and workshops, coordinated national school engagement projects, updated and expanded the organisation's online learning content, and supported its Sandford Award applications. Hannah joined the Heritage Education Trust as a Sandford Award assessor in 2023.
