

SANDFORD AWARD

Sarah Castle

Sarah has been involved in education throughout her professional life. She started her career as a librarian before moving into the heritage sector. Previously a programme manager at the Museum of London, Sarah is now Head of Access and Learning at the RAF Museum, a post she has held since 2017. Sarah has an MA in Museums and Galleries in Education and a PGCert in Learning and Teaching. She is passionate about the role of learning in heritage organisations and about creating the conditions which allow every child and young person to feel included. Her experience of putting her organisation forward for the Sandford Award was such a positive one that she put herself forward to be a volunteer assessor!
